

A Reply to Creative Economics by Louis Althusser:
By Shomit Sirohi

I. Structural Linguistics beyond Creative Economics

Class I – Not only shops, but also types of shops – from Electronic Stores with Playstation, to in fact Mercados with Olives.

Class II – Types of schools, and hospitals and even finally colleges and universities.

Class III – All done in planning and management, including notes on agriculture.

Class IV – Types of stationary shops, even pubs, and music shops and even culture around book shops.

Class V – All of this together makes civil society in Hegel's Philosophy of Right shifted in Sirohi to the whole plan itself – that in fact apartments also with parks.

Class VI – Marques.

Class VII – Universal stores, like Addidas, or Nike or even Sony.

II. Structural Linguistics on Spain and France therefore

Linguistic types of class – Madrid school, Cervantes, and Complutense

Ecole, Lycee and college.

III. Louis Althusser interpreted

Class – Althusser means just this in a rigorous fashion is civil society, but Sirohi adds creative civil society, yes, like his school, his website and his love for photocopying culture.

Class II – Althusser is sounding Sirohian, that is all.
